PASSING OF CLEMENCEAU

Republicans are traditionally ungrateful and France seems no exception to the rule. Clemenceau had his heart set on the preservation of the republic of France but the voters thought otherwise and turned him down for an invited statesman. The tiger of the revolutionaries efforts did more to save his country than those of the Republicans who were thrown into the discard although on several occasions he was officially selected on the shoulder of deputies introduced resolutions that Clemenceau should be acclaimed "Savior of France." This may be all right as far as it goes but it does not seem to satisfy many to thrust on a man whose sole ambition was to press on the destruction and help regenerate the country.

He was instrumental in inspiring the plan of campaign to assist in overthrowing the empire of the allies, but it was Clemenceau who was the author of French and gave him unlimited power to do what he could in the war of the allies.

There are suggestions of a conspiracy that Poincaré, the war minister, should be exiled was treated with scorn as Poincaré's return was a moment's rest that did not place him in the van of the world's favor, especially appealing to the suffrages of the French people. Poincaré's influence and virtue, statesmanship and skill in rallying the allied armies under a commander-in-chief by the French people, it was the venerable statesman who suffered at his past day and night, losing sleep and risking health in traveling back and forth from Paris to the front line of battle during many dreadful hours when it was deemed advisable to remain in separating France and Boulogne when capture of that long wage against foreign domination. These sacrifices are forgotten by the unwilling Frenchmen who see nothing but victory and are still slighted to look back to determination of the author of the conflict. The idea of the hour has fallen and the idea of sacrifice is often more emphasized.

DISCLOSURES OF ADMIRAL SIMS

The former manager argued on handling national affairs under the slogan administration must wage war more forcibly, illustrated also in an present hearing before the senate committee on naval affairs. Sims has in reputation gained by hard knocks in the service and it is to his credit that at no time from his advent into command of the service has he been chary of placing blame wherever it belongs. And he himself he was rash enough to indulge in slanders that might have earned a court-martial and ignominious dismissal had it not been for the intervention of Roosevelt who saw the gravity of the complaints and acted accordingly. The commander of the American naval forces operating in British waters, however, goes to Secretary Daniels since he is fortified with letters of recommendation which go to sustain his statement that the recent losses were prompted by lack of support from Washington, and states that if he had been held responsible for action but the charge is backed up by documents evidence being to show that such was the case. The aviation chief argued the administration cannot be criticized and another admiral is brought home to the doors of the administration who seems to have been ranking with inefficiency and incapacity from the moment that big things were undertaken. The war department has been riddled with scandals, the post office minister is shamed in the nostrils of decent and patriotic citizens, the insurance department failed to function, the post office department collapsed under the war strain in not delivering letters to the door of the front and the treasury department has been exposed as the stronghold of grafters, while the department of transportation, safe refuge for the Reds and Bolsheviks who dodged to the fighting branches of government. This makes a nice record for the democratic party to go before the nation with an apologetic resolution.

REGENERATION OF NEVADA

The hills surrounding at Reno attained such importance in the estimation of a sufficient editors that most of the leading daily papers sent special representatives to report the doings. These papers all agree that the turning point in political affairs in Nevada has been reached and all predict a sweeping victory for the party in the next general election.

The democratic emblem of Nevada upon which is perched the "Red Fox" has won singular distinction as a congressman and a governor, and also won recognition by the greatest republican rally in the history of the state on the occasion of the visit of Will H. Hays, chairman of the republican national committee, "says the Las Vegas Times."

Republicans from every county in the state came to Reno to pay their respects to the author of the grand old party, and to hear his speech for party solidarity at Reno's largest playhouse. The hall was packed with visitors, and a spontaneous welcome was given to the republican chief and his party.

It was freely predicted that a new republican party was born in the hills of Nevada may well take warning from the example of the early days of republicans. At no time in the state's history have so many republicans assembled, not excepting the time when presidential candidates made personal bids for the state.

Of outstanding importance to Nevada republicans was Mr. Hays' statement that Nevada soon may expect to be given three electoral votes, with the possibility of gaining a republican senator.

At the conference Mr. Hays advised reorganization of the party in the state and the infusion of new blood.

The rehabilitation of Nevada republican politics was accomplished after eight years of disorganization," says the San Francisco Chronicle. "Complaint was made at the meeting that inactivity had marred the organization to such an extent that no progress was made in 1920 was seriously endangered and demands were made for the formation of a separate state organization to function independently.

A host of speakers followed this suggestion in which the opinion was advanced by many speakers that the blame was not the committee's but the general apathy of the party was partly to blame.

"Committee-men from distant counties entered the debate with the warning that republicans outside of Reno are not interested in Reno's factions and demanding that, for the good of the party, the past be forgotten."

WOOLGROWERS FAVOR LEAGUE
RESERVATIONS

By Associated Press.

SALT LAKE CITY, Jan. 19.—An appeal that American wool growers go on record in favor of the peace treaty and the League of Nations was made by F. J. Hagenbarth, of Salt Lake City, president of the National Wool Growers association, where the organization opened a three days' convention here today. "We should be ready to hold out a helping hand," he said. "But let me have a league based on American ideals and at the same time safeguarding our own constitution and nationality."

President Hagenbarth described the railroad service during the past two years as "unsatisfactory" and "detrimental to livestock." In all he said the railroad service has been "wretched and badly disorganized" and asserted the losses of the growers from losses incident to the bad service would run into millions.

In the past year affords a fair example of what the shipper may expect from government operation of railroads, he said. "I am sure the wool growers will be a unit against any undertaking."

President Hagenbarth said stress upon the shortage of freight cars double deck cars are especially needed, he said, for the shipment of sheep.

From present indications, President Hagenbarth said, it is quite certain there will be no reduction of costs in the production of the 1920 wool crop. "The 1920 yield," he asserted, "is already 80 per cent made and paid for and necessarily there can be no saving."

He emphasized the necessity of competition with English and foreign wool. "At the present we are largely in the hands of Great Britain as to what prices on fine wool should be," he said.

The general impression prevails," he said, "that the wool growers have been robbing money. However, the wool and mutton production business has not been as profitable as before the war. Money has been made in isolated instances and localities.
